

Why Women Talk About Travel - SFTS57

Scot McKay: You're listening to Snippets from the Summit with your host, Scot McKay. O how's it going, gentlemen? This is your main man, Scot McKay from X&Y Communications coming at you again with another snippet from the Summit as part of the Mountaintop podcast. Today we're going to talk about why women all seem to talk about travel, especially on their online dating profiles and on the apps, et cetera, et cetera. Even on first dates, right? It's a big topic of discussion, when you're getting to know a woman or even before you've gotten to know her, right? Like on an online dating app. Why do women always talk about this? Well, if you know anything about Emily and I and how much we love travel, then you probably could have seen this particular snippet coming. But I've never heard anybody really talk about this in detail and break down why women really seem to talk about travel so much. So let's do that right now. To summarize up front here, whenever you look at a woman's dating profile or see her on an app, whatever little she wrote strikingly often talks about travel. And then she shows a pic from that one time she and her besties finally made that trip to Cancun for a long weekend. Or a few dusty old shots from that one trip to Paris, she took that one time. So why did they do that? Well, first of all, travel is low hanging fruit when considering adventure and most women are starving for a little bit of excitement in their life. So when women post this, that's what it's all about. But even more importantly, travel is very romantic. And you know, I define romance as any experience that is uniquely shared between a man and a woman or else it would feel kind of gay and awkward and weird. So when men and women travel together, it's very romantic. So add it all up and here's the deal. Most self-proclaimed female travel lovers are all talk, okay? And not a whole lot of action. And here's why. Of course, when it comes to spending money, most of us prioritize literally everything over travel in this life. Also, we know women tend to live in fear more than men. So the raw truth is that even though most women would love to travel, they're too chicken to do it solo. Also, as much as you hear about solo travel, it really sucks compared to having a companion. I mean, that's true for men as well as women. Generally speaking, the fantasy of backpacking through Europe, getting laid at a different hostel in a different city every night doesn't always pan out. As you probably know by now, Emily and I have been all over the world and it seems like we always seem to meet a group of 20 something friends who met at a hostel and decided to hang out together from there as they travel all over the world. World. When I was single, I accumulated over 200,000 frequent flyer miles, but I didn't feel like using them until I had the right woman to travel with. And let's just say, literally, as soon as Emily and I got married, we started using those frequent flyer miles. And importantly, at that point, Emily had only been to the US And Mexico where half her family lives. So she hadn't done a whole lot of solo travel for the aforementioned reasons. And I hadn't traveled outside the country in ages. Not only because of work, but also because I was single and indeed didn't feel like going on those adventures so much with nobody to share them with, even after Emily and I had been married for a while. Matter of fact, you could probably say, especially because Emily and I had been together for a while and done extensive amounts of traveling together and enjoyed it immensely. There was a time that I spoke at a conference in Europe and Emily didn't come with me for that one, and I stayed about a week extra to visit some places I'd never been before. But a couple years later, I took Emily on basically the same trip. And not only was that a great trip for Emily, it was an even better trip for me also. We even went to the same restaurants I'd been to the last time I was there and I introduced her to the people who ran them. Much better, much more fulfilling trip. So what's the bottom line here? Well, yes, when a woman signals a desire for travel or an enthusiasm towards travel, right on an online dating site or an app, or even in person when you're meeting her for the first time or early on in your relationship, it's a major, major clue that she craves a real relationship with a man who can lead. If this is a woman you're seeing online, indeed, write her a message imagining, a wonderful romantic trip to one of her dream destinations, and you're almost guaranteed an answer gentleman. And what's more, once the two of you click, lead her on an adventurous lifestyle full of unforgettable international memories. It's wonderful to prioritize that in this life, and I promise you'll never regret it. Want to talk about this or anything else? Scot? mountaintoppodcast.com. be good out there. As

00:05:00

Scot McKay: always, visit mountaintoppodcast.com for more U.

00:05:08